Ask the Motor Medics®
Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,
If cars could talk, what would they say?

Darin in Fremont Nebraska

Dear Darin,
We've often wondered what cars would say if they could speak, they certainly have personalities. As we walk through our auto recycling yard there are thousands of cars, trucks and vans all gathered together on the way to their automotive afterlife. Just like people, some will donate their parts to others so that they may continue to live, others are just so worn out that there is nothing left to give. Some have had an easy life while others were abused and had their days filled with strife. Some have had their fluids well taken care of and have no build up of sludge inside their engines while others have very clogged passages. We as humans really do have a lot in common with our vehicles. As for what they would say exactly... that's hard to say. We think they say more than we care to hear. Just like people we often don't listen to each other. They speak through their body language showing us signs of poor running, just like when we are sick and feeling poorly. They leak oil like we bleed and need repair. Yes we really do have a lot in common with our cars. If only people had something as noticeable as a check engine light on their face maybe we would all communicate with each other as well as our cars communicate.

Take care, the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,
I've had more than a dozen vehicles with a rear wiper on them over the past twenty years or so and as far as I can remember all of them didn't work worth a hoot. they would go for the first year then they all would leave that streak in the center of the glass and it seemed like no matter how many times I changed the blade it would only work for a couple months and would then go right back to the same old streak. I see others on the road the same way. What's up with all these wiper failures?

Terry in Dayton Ohio

Dear Terry,
Rear wipers take a beating compared to front. They get a lot of road grime and exhaust up on them that takes its toll on both the blade and the arm and sometimes even the motor itself. When the blade starts to break down it will affect the wipe pattern but also very important is how much down force the arm has on the blade. As the arm is used or even just rests on the glass it loses its pressure while at the same time it's deforming the blade. Many parts stores now carry a complete assembly of blade and arm and we often replace both the make sure they give a good wipe. If you have been replacing the blade only that may be why they seem to fail so soon.

Take care, the Motor Medics
