Ask the Motor Medics®

Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,
I have purchased my first camper and I am trying to get it ready for the road. It is a 40-foot fifth wheel toy hauler that weighs about 20k lbs. I have a 2017 Ram Diesel truck that I use to pull my boat, but it does not have working trailer brakes. The dealer wants over 1k to repair the system. Can I install an aftermarket brake controller on the truck even though it came with a factory one? The ride home from the camper dealership was a little scary without camper brakes and I do not want to pull to far without them.

Ralph in Beaumont Texas

Its good to see that you have a truck that should be able to pull that size camper. We have may calls and emails from people wanting more power out of their truck so they can overpull which is never a good idea. The second most answered question is getting the trailer to stop. Trailer brakes are required for large campers most everywhere by law loaded or unloaded. Many trucks are now coming equipped with factory installed brake control units but when they fail the cost can be outrageous. We have seen many aftermarket brake controls installed and the factory one bypassed either due to failure or personal choice. Ask your local trailer dealer to recommend one to fit your needs. If you are not comfortable installing and testing one ask them to install it.

Take care, The Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,
My 2008 GMC Acadia seems to be having a transmission issue. When I drive it for short trips such as 3 miles or less it works fine but if I drive over 3 it starts to act up. The transmission will jerk extremely hard as it shifts and sometimes when I stop it seems to go into neutral then bangs into gear. The dealer replaced it at no charge under extended warranty once but now it's out again and they want $3800 to replace it. Is there any cheap fix I can do to get it going again?

Mike in Bloomington Illinois

The short answer is no, there is not a cheap fix for this one. We have replaced over a hundred of this model's transmission in our own shop and yes, they are expensive if you go with a new dealership part. There are alternatives though and if you like your dealership they may even be able to offer you one of them. Many aftermarket companies build great transmissions with 3yr 100k mile warranties and there are used transmissions from parts sources like car-part.com who can help you source a certified used part with a warranty. We have seen used units as low as $2k installed. While still expensive, it is a far cry from $3800. The other option for you may be having yours rebuilt. The cost can greatly vary depending on how much is wrong with your unit.

Take care, The Motor Medics
