Ask the Motor Medics®

Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a 2005 Ford truck that I use to pull my fifth wheel camper 20,000 miles or more per year. We are retired and tour the country. We have been listening to your Under The Hood radio show for several years and as we travel, we check the website for stations to listen on and so far, have heard you on the air in 20 different states. We are true Hoodies. We heard you talking about tire pressure monitors recently and how all cars are coming out with them, but our truck is not equipped and wondered if we could install them as an accessory? We have had several close calls due to low tires on both the truck and the camper and wonder if they can be installed on both of them?

Steve and Jennifer, listening this week to KMAS from the KOA outside Seattle Washington

Dear Steve and Jennifer,

Thank you for being such die-hard Hoodies. There are aftermarket kits out there to do just what you want. These kits have many features like individual tire pressure, low or high-pressure alerts and more. The features depend on the price you pay for the unit. Many people monitor every wheel on the vehicle and trailer. The units can be very easy to install yourself and can be found at many truck stops, camping centers, and parts stores. Knowing your pressures is a great way to increase your safety.

Take care, the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I have heard you talk about cabin air filters many times over the years so you would think that I would take the time to see if my car was equipped with one. My vents started to blow much weaker over the past few months and I just kept turning up the dial until I could not get the car to cool off. I was not able to get in right away to have it checked and I started hearing a rattle noise under my hood when I had the defroster or air conditioning on. Once I had time to get it to the shop, they told me my air conditioning compressor had failed and it would cost $1400.00 to repair it in addition to the $15.00 cabin air filter which they will install for free with the repair. Why would a dirty air filter cause a bad compressor? Some cars don't even have a filter.

Myron in Valentine Nebraska

Dear Myron,

The filter needs to be changed regularly or it will restrict airflow. When it gets severely restricted the evaporator core for the air conditioning may get so cold that oil in the system will not flow well and it is possible that in some cases it could damage the system. Usually, the pressure switch in the system would shut it down but we don't know all your details. If you have a cabin air filter, check its condition regularly.

Take care, the Motor Medics
